Louise Warneford's journey began like countless other mothers. However, the birth of her first child, Oliver, in 2006 would forever change the course of her life. Oliver was born with a rare genetic condition called CHARGE syndrome, which presented him with multiple complex challenges that required around-the-clock care.

Louise found herself navigating a complex healthcare system, often feeling lost and overwhelmed. As she sought support and resources, she realized a glaring gap in the support available for families like hers.

From Personal Experience to Collective Action: Founding Baby Dreams

Determined to make a difference, Louise founded Baby Dreams in 2008. Baby Dreams is a non-profit organization dedicated to supporting families with children with complex needs and improving postnatal care for all families.

Through Baby Dreams, Louise has established a network of support, providing practical assistance, emotional support, and access to essential resources for families facing similar challenges to hers.

Expanding Horizons: Advocacy and Policy Change

Louise's advocacy efforts have not been limited to supporting individual families. She has become a vocal advocate for policy change, working tirelessly to improve the postnatal care system and ensure that every family receives the support they need.

Louise's advocacy has been instrumental in shaping policies and raising awareness about the challenges faced by families with children with complex needs. Her work has contributed to policy changes that provide more support and resources for these families.
